George Bush

George Bush, Director of Central Intelligence, has had a distinguished career in business, politics, and foreign affairs.

Following service as a highly decorated navy carrier pilot during World War II, Mr. Bush graduated from Yale University in 1948. He founded a successful oil company in Texas, which he operated until resigning to run for Congress. Mr. Bush served two terms in Congress, from 1966 to 1970. In 1971 he was named U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, leaving that post to serve as Chairman of the Republican National Committee from January 1973 to September 1974. President Ford selected Mr. Bush as Chief of the U.S. Liaison Office in Peking, where he served until he was recalled to become Director of Central Intelligence in January of this year.

Mr. Bush is now engaged in reshaping the structure of our intelligence community to fit the times, as directed by a recent Presidential Executive Order. As President Ford said at Mr. Bush's swearing-in ceremony, "in peacetime there is no substitute for intelligence." In this spirit, Mr. Bush is moving forward in his task of leading our intelligence organizations into a new era.

John D. deButts

John D. deButts, recipient of the 1976 Business Statesman Award, has earned wide recognition and respect for forceful spokespersonship on behalf of both the great enterprise heads and the entire business community.

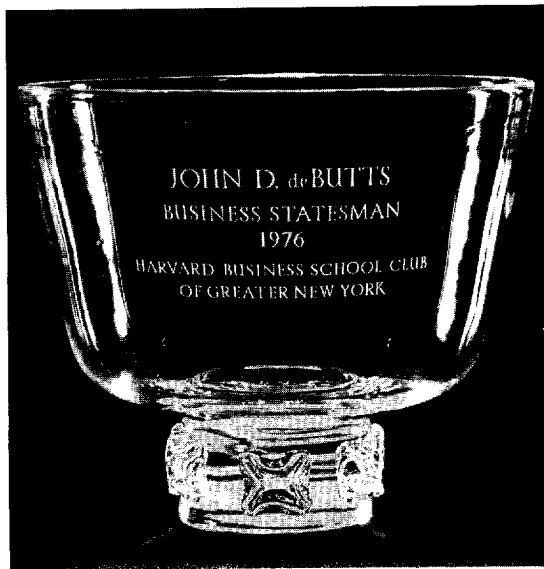

Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company for the past four years, his vigor in speaking out on national telecommunications issues concerning the Bell System is matched by the candor and eloquence with which he champions private enterprise. At the same time, Mr. deButts has been forthright in reminding business of its obligation to earn the freedom it cherishes.

He is a concerned and active citizen at home and on the national scene. Mr. deButts serves as a governor of United Way of America, as a vice-chairman of both the Conference Board and the Business Council, and as co-chairman of the Business Roundtable.
