WASHINGTON POST BLUNDERS IN COVER-UP OF CIA STORY

NEW YORK, Jan. 23—The Washington Post inadvertently revealed today that the Central Intelligence Agency's attempt to establish a military dictatorship in Great Britain involves a top CIA official as master of operations on the spot in England.

For the past week front-page news in Britain and Continental press, the CIA and its front organizations are being openly touted as the necessary international Gestapo to step in and deal with the worldwide capitalist breakdown crisis.

The Post, attempting to cover the CIA's Operation Orpheus as a "minor bureaucratic shift," said intelligence sources attribute the sudden beefing-up of CIA personnel in Great Britain not to any CIA "increased activity" as such, but only to the "importance of the new 'station chief,' 'Card' Meyer.

R. Harris Smith, an acknowledged employee of the Central Intelligence Agency until 1960, reveals in his book OSS that Core Meyer is one of the highest officials of the Agency, and that since 1954 he has been the Chief of the CIA's Covert Action Operations.

Meyer is notorious as the leader of the CIA takeover of the National Student Association and penetration of various U.S. labor organizations during the 1960's.

The Washington Post article was written by Benard Mossitor, identified by Swedish Government sources as a CIA agent. Members of the National Caucus of Labor Committees received a "flat denial" of this identification by Phillip Foisie, Post Assistant Managing Editor for Foreign News. Foisie asked "who in the Swedish Government said he was CIA?" He then blurted out, "If the Swedish Government has issued a statement, I'll go see the Swedish Ambassador."

The Washington Post now holds the New York Times in their cover-up of known criminal activities of the Central Intelligence Agency. While publishing last Sunday a lengthy front-page tirade against the Labor Committees, who have been exposing Operation Orpheus internationally since New Years, the Times thoroughly censored any reference to the British CIA takeover story, even in the article attacking the NCLC!

On Jan. 18, the Times of London ran a story whose source was a self-admitted CIA agent—Miles Copeland—stating that "between 30 and 40 extra American intelligence men have been drafted to Britain since the present state of emergency was introduced."

A subsequent front-page Times article suggested that "From Washington Britain must look like a Central American banana republic...it must be seen that the Government is incapable of governing. Militant trade unionists are in direct confrontation with authority." This out-pouring is part of the public surfacing of CIA takeover operations.

In a later letter to the London Times, agent Copeland fuels the fire of the international CIA-orchestrated "Red Scare," now spreading across Europe and North America. Copeland reasons, "The CIA should move into England because both Black September and IRA have boasted that 1974 is to be 'the year of killing.'"

The Washington Monthly (June 1973) reports that the CIA feeds information on IRA and Black September actions to a Cabinet Committee to Combat Terrorism within the State Department, which in turn warns diplomats throughout the world. These "revelations" and quite probably the daily activities of these "revolutionaries" are under the complete control of the CIA.
