-- EURA's Director and Deputy Director joined almost 30 analysts at a two-day retreat near Havre de Grace, Maryland and discussed career management, the publication review process, and the working environment. The office will test several novel suggestions made by the analysts.

-- There were eight briefings on the Hill this past week.

Congress

-- On Tuesday, 18 February, Evan Hineman will meet with Representative Stokes to discuss the problem of minority hiring within the DDS&T. This is a follow-on to a conversation when Representative Stokes visited an Agency facility.

-- On Wednesday, 19 February, HPSCI resumes its current intelligence updates with the ADDI and ADDO scheduled to appear. The next update is not scheduled until mid-March. These updates have gotten excellent reviews and a good turnout of Members.

Administrative

-- The House and Senate have been far apart on their respective proposals for a new supplemental retirement system for those hired after 31 December 1983. However, the Office of Personnel and Congressional Affairs representatives met this past week with the HPSCI staffers, and Jamie Cowan, Senator Steven's architect of the Senate legislation. The information gained indicates a compromise is near. The HPSCI staffers' position was very supportive of Agency requirements, somewhat of a reversal from their previous position. This, combined with data coming in from our consultants and the information received from Jamie Cowan, bodes well for the Agency. The provisions which we considered critical to us are being incorporated into the new program.

Things will be moving fast from this point on, with a deadline of 30 April set for enactment of the legislation. We are staying in close contact to ensure our requirements are achieved as the legislation progresses.

-- Congressman Frank Wolf posed several questions to the Agency regarding the potential impact of changes proposed for 1 July 1986 in the way Federal annuities are taxed. Data gathered in support of our response indicates that we could face serious shortages of manpower and expertise if that legislation is passed.

-- OL was advised by the Executive Director of the Institute of the Ironworking Industry that the Agency's new Headquarters Building is to receive their "Building of the Year" award. The Institute is composed of 20 representatives from major steel erection companies and bases its awards on the following criteria: quality of design and construction; lasting significance of the structure; architectural-engineering merit; and the use of steel as the building's primary structural system. Buildings that have won this award in the recent past are the Mobile Oil Corporation Headquarters located in Northern Virginia and the Intelsat Headquarters located in suburban Maryland. The Executive Director of the Institute will soon be sending the Agency a letter requesting photographs for display at an award ceremony to be held at the Congressional Country Club, and also requesting a proposed list of Agency attendees.

23. The first phase of OTE's Excellence effort is over. With written contributions from the Office's branches, and a series of meetings involving management and staff, the Office determined that it would be useful to articulate what OTE believes in; thus:

WE MEAN IT

Training that counts for CIA
Leading the way in training
Working to be the best
Our people are the solution.

Each branch also developed lists of specific things it could do in furtherance of the Office beliefs. Many have already been put into effect. Some require support from management, and these, too, are being acted on.
