MSA

The Software Company

September 24, 1986

STAT

A few weeks ago when you, Ken, and I were talking, he asked if I.E. would permit total free form formatting of reports. I said I didn't know and made a mental note to check on it. My program response time on mental notes is certainly slow. Today, I was reviewing some of the advanced reporting features in the I.E. Reference Guide. When I read the answer, I remembered the question. Free formatting may be done by using LIST statements. LIST AT is used for column location and LIST ADVANCE XX is used for line spacing. Of course, using these statements only is of value if you know specifically by column and line number where you want to be.

Hopefully, this information was covered in the I.E. class that people attended.   STAT

Very truly yours,

John M. Holmes

JMH/js

STAT