>SOVIET WEAPONS/>RATHER: The Soviet-made weapons captured during the >CIA>U.S. military invasion of Grenada in October 1983 has turned out to be a bigger bonanza than first thought.
Pentagon correspondent David Martin explains why.

MARTIN: . Informed sources tell CBS News that most of the Soviet-made weapons captured by American troops in Grenada have been secretly turned over to the CIA to arm U.S.-backed guerrillas in places like Nicaragua and Afghanistan. These same weapons were once denounced by President Reagan as the tools of Soviet-backed subversion.
PRESIDENT RONALD REAGAN: This warehouse contained weapons and ammunition stacked almost to the ceiling, enough to supply thousands of terrorists.

MARTIN: The captured weapons, which were once prominently displayed, looked like a major windfall for the CIA, nearly 10,000 rifles, 5+ million rounds of ammunition along with anti-aircraft and machine guns, enough, according to the Pentagon, to equip two infantry battalions for 30-45 days of combat. Since the weapons are Soviet-made, they have the added attraction of not being traceable to the U.S. Some of the ammunition is still stored here in bunkers at an Army depot in Pennsylvania, waiting to be distributed to what the Pentagon calls 'other government agencies.' Sources say the CIA wanted to transfer the weapons to the contras at no cost. But the Senate Intelligence Committee objected, arguing that the CIA was trying to evade the ban on spending for the secret war against Nicaragua. Until Congress lifts that ban, the CIA is prohibited from sending any of the Grenada cash to Central America. But the weapons here remain available to supply the CIA's expanding war in Afghanistan. David Martin, CBS News,
