O/CONGRESSIONAL AFFAIRS

86-2793

Dear Mr. Gries:

The Australian press has recently carried several major stories containing serious allegations of corruption by the Suharto regime in Indonesia. If true, these allegations could have a major impact on US-Indonesian relations, particularly with respect to the administration of our foreign aid program.

Therefore, the Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs would like to obtain the Agency's assessment of the validity of these allegations. In particular, the Subcommittee requests a response to the following questions:

1. What is the extent of corruption in Indonesia? What is the political impact of the corruption? Is it potentially destabilizing, in terms of generating opposition to the Suharto regime?
2. Is there any evidence that the Suharto family has engaged in corrupt practices? Has President Suharto personally enriched himself while in office?
3. What is our best estimate of the wealth of President Suharto? Of the Suharto family?
4. Is there any evidence that senior members of the Suharto Government have engaged in corrupt practices?
5. Has there been significant capital flight from Indonesia to other countries? If so, what is the estimated magnitude of this capital flight? In which countries was the capital invested?
6. Is there any evidence that any U.S. military or economic aid has been diverted from its intended purposes for the personal enrichment of Suharto family members or government officials?
7. Is there any evidence of significant investments in the United States by President Suharto, other members of the Suharto family, or senior Indonesian government officials?

A prompt response to these questions, in classified form if necessary, would be greatly appreciated.

Cordially,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'S. Solarz', is written over the typed name and title.
