The discussion will be helpful to him both because his views will be the better informed for having heard those of the other principals and because he will then be better be able to speak for the Intelligence Community on those occasions when he is so required. He hopes that the principals will also find it useful to be able to stay informed on others' views on key issues.	25X
The Estimate, the Chairman continued, is the first that looks at the succession in North Korea, a country that is one of those in this world that we know the least about, and about which we are least able to make predictions. It examines the prospects for the transfer of power from Kim Il-song to his son, Kim Chong-il, on a graduated basis. It also establishes some scenarios for political change, assesses their effects on political stability, and looks at the implications for the United States. The first Key Judgment highlights the limited information we have available on North Korea and cautions consumers that our predictions should be read with this lack in mind.	25X1 25X1
The Chairman then turned the floor over to Mr. Ford, the National Intelligence Officer for East Asia. Mr. Ford, in turn, introduced the Estimate's drafter, of the Central Intelligence Agency, whom he described as a national treasure.	25X: 25X:
