their publishing requirements, and P&PD agreed to supply these personnel. This brings the number of positions supplied by FBIS for staffing by P&PD to 13. Additionally, approximately 70% of the Joint Publications Research Service (JPRS) reports have been added to the electronic publishing network with an impressive reduction in the numbers of finished pages produced due to compaction of text through typesetting. P&PD will continue to support the publishing requirements of FBIS, and a new Memorandum of Agreement between FBIS and P&PD has been drafted detailing the obligations and commitments of each component.

*The significant increase in typeset pages and decrease in laser plates is directly attributable to the electronic publishing network for FBIS/JPRS. These publications were not previously typeset, and the decrease in plates is due to data compaction gained through typesetting.

The Significant increase in press impressions is mainly attributable to the publication of the Redbook in the first quarter of FY-88.

The decrease in document copying is attributable to several factors:

1. Reduced copying requirements in general
2. Improved service and availability of walk-up copiers in B&RC
3. Reduction of FBIS/JPRS copying
4. Better coordination with P&PD Planning Services Staff resulting in high volume jobs being satisfied through traditional printing process.
