Dear ~~Judge~~ ^{Judge} Webster:

Late last year, the Department of Energy (DOE) commissioned an outside study team, led by Rear Admiral Sumner Shapiro, former Director of Naval Intelligence, to conduct a comprehensive survey and analysis of intelligence and related programs throughout the Department. The study's principal conclusion was that while DOE, and the National Laboratories in particular, are making important and often unique contributions to the national intelligence effort, the Department has both the charter and the capability to play an even greater and more significant role as a member of the Intelligence Community. The study team recommended a number of measures with regard to organization and resources designed to improve management of intelligence and related activities throughout the Department, and thereby enhance DOE's intelligence posture. The Secretary of Energy has accepted the principal conclusions and recommendations of the study team and steps are already being taken to act on them. Mr. Robert J. Walsh, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Intelligence, will be coordinating all actions both within and external to the Department in implementation of the study's recommendations.

STAT

One immediate result of the study has been the designation of Mr. Walsh as the Department's Senior Intelligence Officer. As such, he will have oversight responsibilities for all intelligence and related activities within DOE. The intent is not to disrupt or impede the many fine direct relationships that exist among various DOE offices and field elements and their counterparts in the Intelligence Community but rather to provide a focal point for purposes of communication and coordination.

My purpose in bringing this to your personal attention is two-fold: to advise the Intelligence Community, through you, of DOE's commitment to assure a more active role to support the national intelligence effort and to solicit the Community's and your understanding and support as we proceed along that path.

Sincerely,

Joseph F. Salgado
Deputy Secretary
