— // — 27 SEP 1983

70 chile: volodia teitelboim's commentary: several countries throughout the world have paid tribute to allende, because he is the symbol of democracy, and because he wanted to raise the standard of living of the masses. chilean exiles have witnessed international solidarity with the chilean cause. the current objective of chilean exiles is to struggle for the return of democracy. teitelboim refers to communist participation in the allende administration, highlights outstanding features of late president allende, notes that relations between allende and the communist party were good. commentary points out that allende fell because his independent policy was not in line with what the U.S. state department wanted. teitelboim recalls last message delivered by allende before his death; this message was addressed to workers and now workers have let their voice be heard. workers, students, and all sectors are now clamoring for democracy. chile's devotion for democracy and justice did not die with allende; the people are now once again striving for freedom. it is not possible to neglect the past. it is not a matter of reviving the popular unity, it is not possible to recreate a situation that prevailed in 1973. this is the time to continue with the struggle for freedom.
