94 aleksey grigoryev, 3d in series on africa" can africa become self-sufficient in food?" agriculture remains main bottleneck in african economy; according to fao director, africa is ill and increased food production is its only chance of recovery. africa could become self-sufficient in food: even drought-stricken areas have potential. what is needed most is sweeping agricultural and social reforms in african villages, above all cooperatives. afr countries must restructure their relations with west which has marked influence on their agricultural policy.
