The site is a structure (a building). Aspects of the building are that it is tall, long, wide and is constructed of stone, glass and metal.

There are cables in the area of the structure and there appears to be some construction underway -- as there was a presence of scaffolding, heavy equipment, cranes etc.

There are a number of books, papers, and records -- all of which are valuable and as such they are protected. Inside the structure there are vaults or compartments used for the storage of valuables -- jewel studded materials, and other valuables. There are translucent boxes with wooden bases which are used for display or containment of objects. Ceramic slabs or tables are in the building accompanied by bright lights and gleaming silver instruments (AOL surgical instruments). Numerous chrome trays, cabinets and bare floors are in the structure.

There is a very high ceiling in the structure. The lighting in some areas is very dark or spotlighted. Desks and lamps are in some of the rooms. Doors, long hallways, and elevator with a brass front and marble walls are present. People are walking to and from briefings and offices. These people are well dressed in suits with briefcases -- very business like.

The structure seems to be a government building, perhaps an archives of some sort. Concepts associated with the word "archives" are: vaults, drawers, safes, computers, microfiche, records, tapes, papers, letters, books, objects, data, birth, death, marriage, boundaries, government, church, state, city, clan, family, personal, father, mother, parents, territory, land, museum, war, military, science and naval.

There was a very prominent aspect of historical and political. Stage five was done the word "congress" -- and the concepts associated with this word are: constitution, Bill of Rights, revolutionary, government, historical, Declaration of Independence, military, united, separation, guarded.

An interim summary on this site indicated that it was a government building, housing protected historical documents. These documents are significant to the people and their heritage. There is a remembrance of revolution and of military and political union.

Library of Congress: the Nation's treasury of recorded wisdom

MILLIONS OF BOOKS await a reader's command in the Main Reading Room. Any adult may consult the card catalogue, hand in his requests at the central counter, and study all day at a lamp-lit desk. Borrowing is restricted to Government use and interlibrary loan.

The library, one of the world's largest, includes far more than books. Its collection includes rare books, posters, handwritten musical scores, Civil War photographs, Jefferson's rough draft of the Declaration of Independence (with editing by John Adams and Benjamin Franklin), Lincoln's early drafts of his Gettysburg Address, the finest surviving Gutenberg Bible, and the first copyrighted motion picture extant, Thomas Edison's Fred Ott's Sneeze. In all, the library bursts with 43,500,000 items.

Packed in eleven trunks and one map case, the original library—"Shipped, by the Grace of God," as a bill of lading reads—arrived from London in 1801, a year after the books had been ordered by Congress. Some went up in smoke in 1814, when George III's troops used them to kindle the Capitol. Fire again destroyed more than half the collection in 1851.

A series of great Librarians of Congress has given the institution world-wide prestige. To Herbert Putnam's luncheon Round Table between 1899 and 1939 came eminent figures, among them William Howard Taft, Calvin Coolidge, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Oliver Wendell Holmes, the Alexander Graham Bells, and the Gilbert H. Grosvenors. Poet Archibald MacLeish succeeded Putnam in World War II. L. Quincy Mumford is the eleventh and current librarian.

Thirteenth-century Latin lectionary (below) glows richly in the library's Great Hall.
