| AFGH | AN REFUGEES IN IRAN | 2 |
| | | . |
| | Over 1.8 million Afghan refugees1.1 million since the 1979 Soviet invasionhave settled in Iran, according to recent official Iranian estimates. About 10 percent of the refugees are received in centers, while the majority have a more uncertain position as illegal aliens. The Iranian Governmentwhich had previously refused international aid for the refugeeswill receive $11 million this year from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and has also | |
| | sought aid from the World Food Program (WFP). | 2 |
| | COMMENT: Deteriorating economic conditions in Iran-caused by falling oil prices and the cost of the Iran-Iraq war-have forced Tehran to overlook its fear of outside interference and seek international aid for the Afghan refugees. | PR | AISE AND PROMOTIONS FOR THE AFGHAN ARMY |

| | successes in Paktia Province. In a speech given in |
| . 1 | Khowst, Defense Minister Major-General Nazar Muhammand praised the army for its destruction of the nearby |
| | insurgent camp in Zhawar Killi. Kabul-based soldiers |
| | who participated in the attack were greeted on their return by government officials including Prime Minister |

| NEW | PARTY CHIEF IN AFGHANISTAN | 2 |
| | | - |
| | Former intelligence chief Najibullah's appointment as | |
| | head of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan (PDPA) to replace Babrak Karmal will not improve the | |
| | regime's ability to prosecute the war and could | |
| | aggravate factionalism. For now, Karmal remains as | |
| | chairman of the Revolutionary Councilthe regime's | |
| | executive branchand as a member of the PDPA Politburo. Najibullah's good relations with the | |
| | Soviets while head of the intelligence service suggest | |
| | he will be a compliant partner, although his background | |
| | probably will reinforce the regime's image as a Soviet- controlled and narrowly based police state. | |
| | | |
| | Unusual Activity in Kabul | |
| | | |
| | Najibullah's appointmentpublicly praised by Soviet | |
| • • | leader Gorbachevfollowed two days of substantially increased security measures and unusual military | |
| | activity in Kabul. According to the US Embassy, Afghan | |
| | troopsmostly unarmedblocked off a large section of | |
| | the capital around the presidential palace and key government buildings on 2 May. Soviet combat forces | |
| | were observed at several points throughout the city on | |
| | 3 May. Kabul airport was closed to civilians, and air | |
| | activity over the city was unusually light. | |
| | Moscow probably had decided before Karmal's return to | |
| | Kabul on 1 May that he should be replaced, but we do | |
| | not know whether the Soviets intended this to occur immediately or whether events forced their hand. | |
| | Moscow probably would have preferred to have avoided | |
| | the public display of military power in Kabul | |
| | associated with the changeoverand the appearance of instability in the regime that it conveyedbut may | |
| | have felt compelled to make the switch because of a | |
| | deterioration in Karmal's health, internal Afghan | |
| | plotting, or a desire to have a leader more capable than Karmal of forcing unpopular policy choices upon a | |
| | recalcitrant government and military establishment. | |

| | Up the Ladder | |
| | Najibullah's appointment in November 1985 as a Secretary of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan (PDPA) Central Committee gave him a much broader role in the regime and expanded his already considerable power. By overseeing the Ministries of Defense and Interior, as well as the Afghan intelligence service (KHAD), he was able to consolidate his control of all of the regime's security forces. | 25) |
| | In addition, Najibullah's new position helped to give him broader experience in party affairs and increase his public visibility, already considerable for a secret police head. Moscow may have seen such expanded horizons as essential preparation for assuming the top post in the regime. Last year a Soviet diplomat in Kabul acknowledged the similarity between Najibullah's rise and Yuri Andropov's movement from KGB chief to | |

Najibullah met daily with all of his major subordinates in order to maintain control. He worked to move trusted members of his Parchami wing of the PDPA into key positions and, when necessary, ignored the formal chain of command in order | 25) 25) |
