High level problem

When asked about the procurement scandal at a reception for House Majority Leader Tom Foley the other evening, former CIA director and former defense secretary James Schlesinger made it clear that former defense secretary Casper Weinberger didn't set the appropriate tone. He said that the problem is a consequence of leadership. "With that amount of money involved, there will always be some people who will do illegal things," Mr. Schlesinger said. "But if the [defense] secretary makes it clear that this type of conduct is unacceptable, you drive the problem down to the lower levels of bureaucracy. If the secretary doesn't, then the problem rises to the higher levels."
