NEWSMAN: Central intelligence Director Stansfield Turner told the American Bar Association in Dallas today that new legal constraints, especially with those dealing with rights to privacy, have significantly changed the U.S. intelligence community, resulting in a temptation to be too cautious.

Over objections voiced by Turner, a federal judge has given the CIA till October 1st to release or reclassify names of professional people and institutions involved in the agency's drug and mind-control experiments.

An advertising agency spokesman says the results of a campaign to recruit new agents for the image-battered CIA has met with tremendous results, bringing in between 4000 and 5000 new applications in less than one month.
