Hizballah: Expanding Terrorist Capabilities

Iran and Syria also are attempting to gain greater control over Hizballah terrorist activity that would conflict with their foreign policy goals.

Facing Increased Domestic and Foreign Pressure
Hizballah—responsible for over a dozen terrorist attacks that killed more than 300 people since the early 1980s—has been preoccupied over the past year with protecting its political and military equities in Lebanon. The organization is being pressed by the Lebanese Government to disarm, to join the political process, and to end its anti-Israeli resistance operations—moves that would undermine the group's militant agenda and ability to recruit young Shia extremists for its terrorist apparatus. Hizballah insists that its status as a "resistance" group, rather than a militia, entitles it to retain its arms, and it has not complied with Lebanese Government deadlines to relinquish its weapons. The Hizballah Leadership Council publicly announced that "no one, not even the Lebanese authority," will be allowed to disarm Hizballah.

Hizballah's militant agenda also has been threatened by Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF) attempts to extend its control in Lebanon, forcing Hizballah to redeploy some forces. Hizballah almost certainly maintains a sizable underground presence in Beirut.

A  group calling itself People's Uprising claimed responsibility for a bombing at the offices of the German airline Lufthansa in Thessaloniki, Greece, on 13 July. Three days later, an anonymous caller telephoned a local newspaper claiming that another unknown group called May 36 had planted a bomb in front of an American Legion office in Thessaloniki.

Catalan Separatist Group Disbands

On 15 July, the Catalan terrorist group Terra Lliure (Free Land) announced its decision to give up its armed struggle for Catalan independence and disband. Terra Lliure's leadership declared that the group will join the Republican Left of Catalonia—a legitimate political party espousing Catalonian independence—in an effort to achieve its goals through nonviolent, political means.

Hizballah Threatens German, US Hostages

A group calling itself Holy Warriors for Freedom—probably a covername for a Hizballah faction—publicly threatened on 24 July to harm two German hostages in Lebanon unless information was received within 48 hours on the condition of two Hizballah terrorists imprisoned in Germany. Abbas Hammadi—convicted in 1987 for the abduction of the two German hostages—had been stabbed in prison the week before the threat was issued. German courts also recently had upheld the life sentence of Mohammed Hammadi—convicted for the murder of a US Navy diver during the hijacking of TWA Flight 847 in 1985. Bonn publicly announced that the Hammadis were in good condition and would be treated like any other prisoners.

The Islamic Jihad Organization—a Hizballah faction holding two US and two British hostages—on 18 July publicly threatened “grave consequences” against the United States if the Hammadi brothers were not released. The communique—IJO’s first public statement in almost two years—was accompanied by a photo of US hostage Terry Anderson. [REDACTED] b3

Hizballah may have issued the threats in the hope of derailing ongoing hostage-related negotiations between Tehran and Tel Aviv. Although a German or US hostage might be harmed, Hizballah is more likely to retaliate by attacking German interests elsewhere. In our judgment, harming a hostage in Lebanon at this time almost certainly would incur a serious Iranian and Syrian backlash that Hizballah would prefer to avoid. [REDACTED] b3
