Rwanda:

Talks End, Fighting Surges

Tanzanian-brokered negotiations foundered yesterday after the Rwandan Patriotic Front rebels refused to sign a cease-fire accord that to them implied recognition of the interim government. Rebel commanders said they would, however, accept deployment of a 5,000-man international force that the UN has proposed to ensure delivery of humanitarian aid.

— It may take several weeks for the UN to bring in such a force, and the RPF probably will use the time to try to defeat government forces.

— The heavy exchange of artillery fire in Kigali yesterday suggests the rebels are making a concerted push to capture the capital.

Prime Minister Kambanda, speaking from a town 80 km west of the capital, has called on every able-bodied Rwandan to join the fight against the rebels.
