4. In the course of the shifting of personnel, after the events of the 20 July had precipitated the amalgamation of the Abwehr apparatus, Oberstleutnant I.G. KLEYNSTUBBER was sent to Spain. This may have given rise to the erroneous impression that Amt VI was beginning to lay the ground work for a post-war information net in Spain. According to Dr. HOTTI such implications could be read into KLEYNSTUBBER's assignment only in ignorance of the following circumstances:

4. a). Oberstleutnant I.G. KLEYNSTUBBER was not a man of SCHELLENBERG's confidence. The fact that he had fought in the Spanish Civil War with the Legion Condor and that he had good connections with the Falange may have qualified him for the job. The underlying consideration in transferring to Spain was, however, that SCHELLENBERG intensely distrusted officers who had held responsible positions in the Abwehr and who had been close to Oberst i.G. HANSEN. SCHELLENBERG once mentioned to Dr. HOTTI that he felt he could trust no one among the leading functionaries of the old Abwehr, with the exception of Oberst i.G. OHLETTZ.

I.O.'s Comment:

Ironically enough Oberst i.G. QUERPE was up to his neck in the conspiracy of the 20 July (see KUEHART report), whereas KLEYNEMÜLLER was suspected and disliked by Oberst HENSEN because of the intimate connections he had with the SD (see ibid.).

b. The official policy of Amt VI did not evince any partiality towards the Falange. The only Amt VI pipe line to that organisation, Dr. HOFFMANN knows about, was possibly handled by Sturmbannführer NOSIG (VI 3, RSHA). RAOUL BUNER, France's one-time Foreign Minister, worked for SCHELLENBERG on purely personal basis without political background (see special report on the BUNER connection.).
