(U//ATUO) Iraq's Nuclear Interests in 1979

(U//ATUG) From the Carter Library comes a 1979 Interagency Intelligence Memorandum (IIM) on Iraq's nuclear intentions. Noting that the available evidence is "fragmentary," and in most cases, ambiguous, the Summary states that "We have no hard evidence that Iraq has decided to actually acquire nuclear weapons," but that the Iraqis have "decided to put themselves in a position to do so" by developing a nuclear base from which such weapons could be eventually produced. The paper judged Baghdad's greatest technical challenge to be the "acquisition of sufficient fissile material." The prospects for stopping Iraq from acquiring "weapons-applicable materials, technology and equipment range from poor to fair," according to the IIM, with the prospect of significant opposition from several NATO allies to a potential US campaign to prevent this occurrence. Some of these nations were among Iraq's principal suppliers in this period. The Implications section highlighted the likely pressure to come from Israel, if Tel Aviv were able to make "a plausible case" that Iraq's nuclear research program had turned to nuclear weapons development. The 1979 IIM noted that "it seems reasonable to assume that [the Israelis] will be disinclined to risk taking any really drastic action unless they are convinced that Iraq is on the verge of acquiring one or two deliverable nuclear weapons. Hence, even though early Iraqi diversion of the initial supplies of French uranium would bring the Israelis to [a] high state of alert, it might not trigger an immediate preemptive response..."

Comment: Tel Aviv secretly launched a successful preemptive airstrike against Iraq's OSIRAK reactor in mid-June 1981.
(U//ATUO) Martial Law in South Korea
(U//AIUO) A daily Korean bulletin dated 1 February 1952 reports that "martial law was declared in southwestern Korea in conjunction with the UN anti-guerrilla campaign, 'Operation Ratkiller.'" The daily bulletin of 12 February reports that "since 'Rat Killer' started on 1 December, more that 8,000 enemy guerrillas have been killed and about 7,000 captured."
U//A IUO) Communist Reaction to President Carter's Visit to CIA (U//A IUO) From the Carter Library comes a 21 August 1978 White House Situation Room Evening Notes for National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski that states, "Pravda last Friday reported that the President assigned o his CIA audience the task of 'organizing a global system of espionage first of all directed at the USSR and other socialist countries.' He is quoted to have said that the sphere of CIA activity will further widen to embrace the whole world, 'including our closest allies and friends.' Pravda's portrayal of the President as personally seeking to direct he CIA primarily against the USSR represents a departure from the usual Soviet propaganda line which depicts him as 'succumbing to pressure from the enemies of detente.' More direct personal criticism could reflect Moscow's continuing displeasure over the current state of Soviet-US relations. Prague Domestic Service emphasized the President's comparison of CIA employees with Caesar's wife, citing administration resignations to assert 'it is not at all clever to be more honorable and more honest that any other US Government institution.' The commentary claims hat it is 'impossible' for the CIA to give up 'fraud and murder,' the 'tools of its trade.' The Czechs point out that the President's statement 'can also be interpreted as meaning the opposite of what the words say' since the President surely knows that Caesar's wife often left dinners in male company and returned with dishevelled hair."
