(U//AIUO) Guatemalan Requester Wants CIA File on His Late Uncle

(U//ATOO) A Guatemalan requester living in Chicago asked for records on Otto Rene Castillo, who, according to the requester, was a Guatemalan poet and left-wing revolutionary activist. The requester states the subject is his uncle who was "tortured and burned to death" by the Guatemalan army in 1967.

(U//ATUO) Requester from UK Asks for Information on "Laserworks Surveillance Bugging Equipment" (U//ATUO) A requester from East Yorkshire, United Kingdom, submitted a request for CIA information on "laserworks surveillance bugging equipment," a subject she is interested in because she is "now entering the close protection industry."

The FOIA case officer informed the requester that no information on the subject was located

(U//AHUO) Requester from Germany Wants Copy of Intelligence: The Acme of Skill (U//AHUO) A frequent requester from Altmittweida, Germany, asked for a copy of Intelligence: The Acme of Skill.

• The FOIA case officer performed a search of the Management of Officially Released Information (MORI) database and found that the requested publication has been previously released. Because the publication has fewer than 100 pages and minimal search time was expended to find it, the FOIA case officer will not ask the requester for search and reproduction fees.

(U//AIUO) Illinois Requester Wants CIA's American Revolution File on Her Ancestor (U//AIUO) A woman from the Chicago suburbs of Illinois this week asked for CIA files on various Polish veterans of the American Revolution, including Casimir Pulaski, who she claims is her ancestor.

	• Casimir Pulaski was a Pole who met Benjamin Franklin in Paris in 1775 and indicated an interest in helping the Americans with their revolution against the British. Franklin gave Pulaski a letter of recommendation for him to carry to George Washington. Pulaski arrived in America in 1777 where the next year General Washington granted him his own legion of cavalry and light infantry. The Pulaski Legion fought in several battles in New Jersey, South Carolina, and Georgia. During the siege of Savannah, Georgia in 1779, Pulaski was wounded and transferred to an American ship in the harbor where he died two days later at the age of 31. Pulaski was buried at sea.
	• The FOIA case officer sent the requester a letter informing her that " the CIA was not formed until 1947, more than a century and a half following the end of the Revolutionary War", and suggested the requester might seek further assistance from organizations such as the National Archives and the Library of Congress. (b)(3)	(U//ATUO)—Archivists from LBJ Library Indicate CIA's Declassification Program "Most Cooperative" (U//ATUO) Charline McCauley and Jennifer Cuddeback, archivists from the Lyndon B. Johnson Presidential Library, visited IM/CIO on 13 June and met with members of IM/CIO's External Referral Unit (ERU), the Public Information Release Division (PIRD), and other groups at with whom the Library deals on a regular basis. Representatives from the OIM Declassification Center provided the visitors with an overview of the CIA's declassification process and a tour of the facilities. The visiting archivists indicated of all the agencies with which they deal, the CIA and the Department of State are the most cooperative.	(b)(3) (b)(3)
(b)(3)	(U//AIUO) In 1952, the CIA's Efficiency Awards Committee forwarded to the Office of General Counsel (OGC) an employee's suggestion that the Agency use federal prison convicts to translate foreign documents. OGC responded in a letter, which was recently reviewed by the DCI team at the OIM Declassification Center, that "the law would clearly seem to prohibit direct contact by representatives of the Agency with Federal Prison officials" and that OGC doubted whether the type of linguistic service the CIA needed would be available in the prison population. 	(U//AHUO) PRB Chairman Briefs Officers in Residence on Prepublication Review Obligations (U//AHUO) This week the Chairman of the Publications Review Board (PRB) spoke with a group of Officers in Residence (OIRs) about their prepublication review obligations. The Center for the Study of Intelligence runs the OIR program, which provides senior Agency officers with the opportunity to become part of the academic world for two or three years, and has an annual conference as a refresher for veterans and instruction for new participants. OIRs are members of the faculty of their host institutions, teach courses on intelligence, and contribute to the scholarly literature on intelligence. It is the last activity of these three that subjects the OIRs to prepublication review, and the Board's Chairman explained the principles and process.
	• The Board's history with OIRs has been uneventful. They routinely submit their work for review and abide by the Board's decisions.	(b)(3)
