(U//~~ATUO~~) From the Archives: Historian's 1953 Memo Outlines Origins of DCI's Sources and Methods Responsibilities

(U//~~ATUO~~) In an April 21, 1953 memorandum from Agency historian A.B. Darling to the Agency's Legislative Council, which was recently reviewed for declassification by the DCI Team at the OIM Declassification Center, the historian outlined the origins of the DCI's responsibility to protect sources and methods. "So far as we can tell, the formula with respect to the Director's responsibility to protect intelligence sources and methods originated in a meeting of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on January 18, 1945. They were discussing the memorandum from Donovan to the President of November 18, 1944 ... and the plan for a central intelligence organization which came out of the historic 121st meeting of the Joint Intelligence Committee on Friday, December 22, 1944." The Joint Strategic Survey Committee recommended that the following wording be added, "In the interpretation of this paragraph (on 'open inspection') the National Intelligence Authority and the Central Intelligence Agency will be responsible for fully protecting intelligence sources and methods which due to their nature have a direct and highly important bearing on military operations."
