November 22, Thursday, 12:40 p.m., at the airport.

MUIZNIKS.

The last one to leave the airplane was M. After a little while he found ^{GULBIS} G.-bis and both of them stayed together. I approached and tapped M. on the shoulder. He was a little surprised, then he tried to remember something Juris had told him in Rome about my settling down to live in the US and working as a track coach at the university in Denver. He said I had lost weight. I said jokingly that this was because of my large amount of work and the fact that life was harder than in South America. M. replied that, as he understood it, life in the US was supposed to be much easier and better than in the rest of the world. I answered that it was better, but that one had to work much harder.

Several Russian players came up to us, who remembered me from Chile and from Melbourne. M. told them about me in Russian, all of which I understood. Then I asked where G-bis was. He had been standing next to us all the time. I asked G-bis how he liked America; he said that he did not know much about it yet, since he had spent all his time playing basketball, and he hoped he would get to know something about American life here in Denver. Juris came up with ^{LAIPENIEKS nee SAAVEDRA} Pety [Patty ?] and I introduced him; however the conversation ended, because the players had to have their picture taken. After that we got together again and M. asked me what the actual status of athletes was in American universities, whether they were amateurs or professionals. I replied that this was hard to explain in a few minutes, as it was a long story; however, we would probably meet later in the hotel and then we could talk about how things were in Latvia and I would tell him about life in America. M. explained to the Russians standing beside him, in Russian, that [the American athletes] were probably professionals, since I had been unable to answer immediately. I said in Russian, to their surprise, that I could speak Russian, and that the Americans believed that the best Russian athletes were all semi-professionals. M. got a little upset and only said: What do you mean? Why should they think so? I said we can talk later, and the players then started to get on the ~~XXXXXX~~ bus. I asked which one was K. and they pointed him out to me. By this time K. was on his way to the bus. I walked up and introduced myself. I said that I welcomed him to America and asked how he liked it here. He replied that this was the first time he was here and he could not express an opinion yet, but that everything was very interesting and different than "at home." I told him I worked at the Denver University and hoped we would be able to meet and talk in the next few days. We said goodbye, and they all got on the buses and left.

I noticed that K. kept apart from the others, all by himself, and that he walked alone to the bus, while M. always remained together with G.

At 6 p.m. I called the hotel and asked for M.'s room number. He answered the phone himself. I asked when he would be free and when we might meet and have a talk. He said that they had gone to bed at 2 a.m. the night before, ^(21 Nov) because they had been flying and after their arrival at the hotel they had gone for one hour to watch the "Denver Bronco" football match; therefore, they had all been given orders to stay in bed from 6 to 9 p.m., and at 9 p.m. they were to go to the Coliseum for training. Finally I asked whether we could meet Saturday morning after the game. He answered evasively, as he did not know yet what the program was going to be, but he said there would surely be a chance to meet. I wished him success for the game and we ended the conversation.

November 23, 7 p.m., Coliseum game:

We were sitting together: myself, my wife, Juris, Paty, [Patty ?], Ritums and his wife. The Russian male players were sitting at the end of the field during the women's game. M. was next to G., but K. all by himself, slightly apart from the others. After a while several Latvians from Denver sat down on the benches behind the Russian players; they were mostly young people, and one group was talking to M. and G., the other group to K. At this time many people were asking for autographs and therefore the activity of the Denver Latvians was not especially noticeable; three of the Latvian players made the most of this and started a lively discussion. Only two of the older Latvians from Denver took part in the conversations, - Bruno BERZINS, who has a brother in Latvia, at present working as a section chief at "VEF"; this products

section manufactures/for foreign export, especially for exhibits in foreign countries. Berzins was a member of the "Starts" basketball team in Latvia; he knows ^{A.} KRAUKLIS, now the coach of the "VEF" team. KAININS was trained by KRAUKLIS, and therefore BERZINS found it easy to talk to KAININS. Berzins talked to K.
for about 5 minutes, and to M. and G. about 20 minutes, Ritums did not get to say very much, but only asked some questions about acquaintances in Latvia. Ritums used to be a member of a select ice hockey team in Latvia, and after the war in Belgium and France.
Ritums has an ultra-nationalist attitude and during the playing of the Soviet national anthem he got up and left the room; as he later explained, he could not listen to this anthem in honor of Stalin and Lenin's party.

I know Berzins slightly, but I have heard that he always tries to explain to everybody that the present situation is different, that there is no point in adopting a harsh attitude towards the Latvians in Russia and the Russians themselves, etc. As far as I know, Berzins started talking to Muiznieks about going on a visit to Latvia next year where he would spend some time with his brother, and then return to Denver. As I understood, he agreed with Muiznieks that he should take with him as many dollars as possible for exchange in Riga, as Muiznieks would help him do this.
M. is said to have a telephone and his number is in the telephone book; he said B. should call him when he arrived in Riga. M. said that many Latvians visited Riga last year from Sweden, England, Canada and the US, and that they had all returned home. M. said that if anyone had some "sins" in his past, he would not even receive a visa. If a person has relatives, as Berzins does, one could ask for permission to stay with them; several tourists had made use of this permission. M. asked Berzins whether the money to cover living expenses in Latvia had to be paid in advance of the trip, or if it could be paid in rubles in Latvia? B. said that, as far as he knew, the living expenses amounted to about $30.00 a day and that, if a person was going to stay at a hotel, the money had to be paid in advance here in America. M. was surprised at this, and he also wondered why it was so much.

B.'s brother who works for VEF earns 150 rubles a month and B. asked whether this was a good salary; M. said it was a very good salary, but M. added that one could not compare it with the US, since here a good suit costs $60.00, but in Riga it is much more. As far as B. knew, M. had bought several suits [here]. In general, B. believed that M. was engaged in "speculation", and that he made use of his trips with the basketball team for this purpose.

When B. asked how much money M. earned, he gave an evasive answer.

M. asked about getting seeds for palm trees, but since these are not available in Denver, B. bought three palm-tree plants and on Monday night, during the women's game, he gave them to M., wrapped in a long package, to be taken back to Riga. M.'s mother is said to have planted ~~the~~^a palm tree when M. was born, but the plant is not growing well. On Monday night B. had asked M. about life in Latvia. M. answered that after the old man's (he meant Stalin's) liquidation, everything was much better, there was more freedom of speech, more food, etc. When B. asked what the present "old man", i.e. Khr., was like, M. replied that he was much better.

~~When~~ During the men's game on Friday night, Berzins talked for some time to Smildzins^a, but when he tried to do the same on Monday night, Smildzins^a was no longer able to talk as^s he was sitting among the Russian women and appeared to be occupied.

Berzins works as an electrician and earns $4.50 per hour; he has his own house at 1058 South Josephine Street or Blvd., Tel. PE 3-9628; his oldest daughter is a teacher in New York and is married to an American ~~man~~ of Jewish extraction, a college graduate, who is also employed as a teacher in New York. They have no children. ~~All their~~^{His} relatives are very wealthy, and own large houses and stores. The young people live on 5th Avenue. They travel to Europe in summer. This daughter of Berzins is a French-language teacher; she graduated from the university in Grenoble, France. B.'s second daughter, about 20 years old, is deaf-mute; she is married to an American teenager and they^{live} in a small room in old Berzins' apartment.

Old Mrs. Berzins travels a lot, she visits her daughter in New York and also goes to Seattle and Los Angeles, I don't know for what purpose. I don't know in what connection, but Berzins knew that Mrs. PILANDERS was planning to travel soon from Denver to Riga to visit some relatives. Mr. and Mrs. PILANDERS are an elderly couple; they live in Denver and are managers of the Denver Women's Club. The meetings and various parties of the Denver Latvian Club also take place in the rooms of this club.

Saturday, 24 November.

About 10 a.m. I called the hotel and found out that the Russians were going to Central City in the morning; they were expected to return at 3 p.m. I went to the hotel at that time for the purpose of meeting some of the Latvians and talking to them. At about 3:15 p.m. one car after the other drove up, also ^{some} V.W. station wagons (small buses), but I did not see "our friends." I talked to the A.A. V. leaders, whom I know personally; we talked about Saturday's ice hockey game in the D.U. arena. It turned out that everyone was coming to watch our game; they needed 13 more tickets for the US women basketball players and I was asked to get these tickets. I promised to do so and telephoned from the switchboard in the lobby to the university. While I was talking to the A.A.V. officials, the Russian coach GOMELSKY was present and he spoke a few words in broken English. After a while somebody called me from the telephone switchboard: "Coach, coach, please come here !" - in plain Latvian language ! Naturally, I was very much surprised. It was Mr. Gomelsky. I walked up to him and he asked me, in Russian, to pick up the receiver and talk to the operator from New York. It appeared that a telephone call for Gomelsky had been announced from Moscow; however, he had been out at that time, and the call had been postponed until Sunday morning, between 11 and 12 a.m., Denver time. I told him all this in Latvian. Then I asked whether he was a Latvian, and he said no, but that he had lived for 10 years in Latvia and had been training the A.S.K. basketball club, including Krumins, Valdmanis, Muiznieks, Gulbis, Kalnins,-- all of them came from this Red Army club !

I said that I seemed to remember him from the contests in Chile and Melbourne, and Gomelsky said that he remembered me too, particularly from Melbourne. He asked what I was doing here, I told him about it, and after 2-3 minutes somebody called him and he left.

Immediately after that Muiznieks and Gulbis came down to the lobby after having dinner on the second floor. I asked them how they liked Central City. They said that they hadn't gone there, but had gone to the city, apparently to do some shopping. Then we spoke about Friday's game, and they said they ^{all} felt tired because of the change in climate. He said that he [M.?] personally felt very nervous and could not sleep. He had been falling asleep only at 5 a.m. ! When I asked why, he said he didn't know himself why he was so nervous. I suggested that we sit down, but he seemed very "busy" and said, maybe later. So we didn't get a chance to talk, because M. was simply being evasive. Gulbis was much more approachable and would have remained, but he had to follow Muiznieks.

I went out to the swimming pool with the A.A.U. officials; some of the players were sitting in groups and talking. Gomelsky was sitting and chatting with one of the Russians. M. and G. were in another group, and farther on K. was walking by himself; he seemed very lonely and forsaken. Suddenly Gomelsky called: "Coach, come here !" in Russian. I went to him and sat down. He introduced me to the Russian, a unit manager, whose name I do not remember. The expedition leader, also a Russian, came up to us and told some jokes about the American horses in Central City which did not understand any Russian and paid no attention to Russian orders, such as "go ahead" or "stop." I asked in Russian whether the cowboy boots they had been given as a present on Friday night were the proper size. He said that even the cowboy boots did not help the horses to understand their orders. The manager ~~left, and~~ and the unit leader both left, and I remained alone with Gomelsky. We talked in Latvian. Gomelsky immediately invited me to visit Riga. If I would like to come for a visit, or if I would like to stay after looking around, I should get in touch with him; I should write to him and he would help to arrange everything. He also asked me why I had moved from Chile to the US. I said that I had been offered a good job at the university, and that my oldest son was already studying here, etc. "I showed some interest" in his suggestion to go to Riga and asked whether he would like to visit me at my home for a little while after the hockey game in the evening; my house was just half a block from the ~~hockey~~ playing field. He said that would be fine and he would be glad to meet the rest of my family; I promised to take him back to the hotel after supper, and we took leave of one another.

I walked through the lobby to get to my car, as I had to hurry to the university to arrange for the tickets to the US women's basketball game. In the lobby I met the Russian manager. The Russian was very much interested in life in the US and invited me to a glass of beer in the restaurant next to the lobby. We went in there. We drank beer and chatted in Russian. He asked me if I could get him some American filter cigarettes. He received some "Kent" cigarettes and praised them very highly. I asked about ^{JANIS} Krumins and ^{MALGONIS} Valdmanis. He said Valdmanis was not in good form, and that Krumins had sprained his back and therefore had not been able to travel with them. Kr. was married to a ~~Russian~~ Latvian sculptress, for whom he had posed and whom he later married. Kr. is said to own a Volga car and is supposed to be an officer in the army. Valdmanis also has connections with the army. He [the Russian manager] said he liked Riga very much, because the Latvians were able to live differently; I understood that he meant one could live better with the same amount of money. The Latvians were good athletes, he said, and were well known in all of Russia. He [the Russian] was thoroughly familiar with track and he asked about the D.U. results. He told me he had two sons, 7 and 9 years old. He asked about my family. He also said he had an American friend in New York, whom he had met in Germany during World War II. They wrote to each other occasionally. He had gone to his friend's house, but the latter had been away, so he left a letter. He said his friend would be very much surprised to hear that he had been in New York. I offered some more beer, but he refused to drink any more. He asked whether I wouldn't like to go home and work as a coach in Riga or Moscow. I said it would be fine to live and work in Latvia, but I had already settled down here and it would be hard to start all over ~~over~~ there. We went out to the lobby and I bought 3 more packages of "Kent" cigarettes which I gave to him, and he was very pleased. I said that I would meet him in the evening at the hockey game and we said goodbye to each other.

Hockey game, Saturday night, 8 p.m.

The group arrived at 8:15 p.m. During the first period I sat next to Smildzina, behind M. and G., and explained the composition of the team, last year's results, how the game between the D.U. hockey players and the Russian national hockey team had ended in a tie, etc. MI said to M. that after they had seen the professional hockey players in New York, the U. [university] players would seem very poor. During the intermission I talked to Gomelsky, the manager, the official Russian interpreter, and a former Russian player from Melbourne, who is now the Russian head coach for all of Russia. During the contest period, the latter sat at the judges' table. He remembered me from Chile and from Melbourne. The main topic of conversation was track. Finally, I remained alone for a moment with Gomelsky, and I suggested that maybe he could come to my house for supper together with M. and G. and K. and Sm. and Dzidra Ustupe. He said that would be fine, they would all be there, but they could not stay more than an hour. He asked about transportation back to the hotel, and I said my family had two cars and I would take them all back. At the beginning of the second play period, I called home and my wife promised to prepare a quick supper for 6-7 persons. Then I went back to the game. I sat down next to K., since he was sitting by himself. Gomelsky was sitting two rows farther behind. K. remembered me from the airport. I asked him whether he was studying in Riga, and he told me he was attending the last course of the engineering faculty. I told him a little about myself and my family, and how I lived and worked here at the university. He told me, without being asked, that he had prepared for this trip for a very long time and that at the last moment he almost had to stay at home because he had pulled some ligaments in the knee, but finally they did take him along. He asked how such injuries were treated in this country. I said we had electrical machines for the treatment of such injuries. Then he asked: was life better in the US or in Canada? I got the impression that he might have heard about life in Canada through some friends, but not about life in the US. I said life was much better in the US, since earnings were better and everything was much cheaper than in Canada. I immediately asked whether he had considered the question of remaining here for good, because -- as far as I knew -- life in Riga was not really so wonderful, but here in the US there were many different possibilities, especially for engineers. If he had not finished the university yet, he could do that here very easily, and I could personally help him. He grew very nervous, looked around cautiously, and said he might think about such a suggestion. I said that Gomelsky would be at my house after the ^(hockey) game and that arrangements had been made for him [K.] and the other Latvians to come along too. He seemed very much surprised and pleased at such a chance. I said I would find an opportunity to talk to him alone in my home, that I would give him the university book so he could read about university life in the evening, and that we would have a chance to discuss all the details of arranging for his possibly remaining in the US. He said he would be interested, but at that time the second play period suddenly came to an end and everyone got up quickly and went to the buses. I approached Gomelsky outside the playground and said that my home was about half a block in the other direction; I also said that I had already talked to the other players and invited them to supper. Gomelsky replied, to my surprise, that it would not be possible for the players to go and separate themselves from the crowd, because an order had come at the last moment from the top leaders that everyone should immediately return to the hotel. Then I said I hoped he at least would come by himself, but he replied that he could not come either as he had to remain with the players. So I did not get a chance to say good-bye to K., as they had all boarded the buses.

Sunday, November 25.

AS I RECALL IT, SUNDAY MORNING AND AFTERNOON
SIDECARS SON WAS ALLEGEDLY WITH K. YET NO MENTION MADE OF IT THERE!
I called K. at the hotel, ext. 249, at 8:30 ~~A~~.m. He answered the phone and sounded nervous, he asked who was speaking, several times. I said I was a friend from the university and asked if I could talk or if anyone was listening. He said we could talk, but not very long. ~~He~~ I apologized for not having said good-bye on Saturday evening, since Gomelsky had changed the plans at the last moment, and I said that the supper had been prepared and I sat alone at the table, thinking how unfree they were under the Red rule. He answered that this was nothing new for them and that I should not take offense because they had been unable to visit me at my home. Then K. himself asked if I might come to the hotel at 10 a.m., as he would like to talk to me regarding the matter we had discussed at the hockey game. There was no doubt that he was thinking about the question of staying in the US. I told him I would be there at 10 a.m., that I had a red V.W., and that I would park my car on the street side behind the lobby; he should go through the lobby and I would wait for him in the car. He agreed, and our conversation ended. I understood that we would have to discuss ^{at this meeting/} ~~all the~~ details concerning an escape.

10 a.m. at the hotel.

I decided that I did not want to drive to the hotel by myself, because in the event K. could not find my car someone could help him to find the right place; I did not want to show myself personally in the lobby, or in any other place, so as to avoid suspicion. Since Ritums had talked to K. on Friday evening during the game, I went to Ritums and told him that I wanted to meet K. and that I would like him to come with me to the hotel and help me to arrange the meeting. We arrived at the ^{prearranged meeting/} ~~place~~ at 9:45 a.m.; I remained in the car and sent

Ritums to see what was going on in the lobby, and in the hotel in general. After 5 minutes R. came back and said the Russians were sitting around in small groups by the swimming pool and talking. K. was walking up and down by himself, looking nervous, along the side of the pool. I asked Ritums to go and sit down in the lobby, to read a paper and observe what was going on. Ten minutes later R. came back again and said they had all gone to their rooms, including K.- R. returned to the lobby and I waited in the car for 15 minutes. It was 10:30 a.m., but still no sign from K. I went to a phone and called K. He said that he was unable to come out, as they had received orders to remain in their rooms, but he asked me to come to the window and he would come out on the balcony. I decided not to go myself, but sent Ritums. After 15 minutes, I drove past the balcony (porch) and saw Ritums talking to K. I saw that K. noticed my car going by and got very nervous. After 3 or 4 minutes, I drove past once more and saw that R. had finished talking, but K. was still on the second-floor balcony. R. got in my car and we drove away. The conversation had been as follows: first of all, K. had come out onto the balcony, looked around, went back into the room, and came out again in about half a minute; then they started to talk. He said they were all being watched very carefully and had been ordered to stay in their rooms, therefore he could not come down. He said to tell me that the only chance to meet would be at the Coliseum, as they would have a training period at 12:00, i.e. in 1½ hours, and at that time I could tell him what I wanted to say at 10:00 that morning. He had been extremely nervous and upset and close to tears. R. had the impression that K. had tears in his eyes during the whole conversation. K. asked that I bring the promised university book with me to the Coliseum.

check floor?

11:30 a.m.

I drove to the apartment of Juris and told him about the whole situation. I gave him the book ^{for K.} and asked him to give K. instructions on how to proceed in the event he wanted to remain in the US. I said that the best time would be Monday night, between midnight and 1 a.m., after the last game. My red V.W. car would be around the corner near the stairway which he would have to use in going up or coming down from his room. I also asked Juris to tell K. that he would be helped in arranging a new life here in the US and that he should not be afraid for his personal safety. He should call me at home between 7 and 9 in the evening, and if not, I would call him myself at his extension between 9 and 10 in the evening and get his answer, whether he wants to remain in the US or not.

??  I also prepared a short letter, containing my telephone number and instructions on how to call me from his room, how to pronounce the telephone numbers etc., which Juris was to give K. in the event they should be unable to talk personally for a sufficient length of time, and K. was to be told that he should destroy the letter immediately after reading it, for his own safety.

FBI??
Coliseum

J. and Poty drove to the Coliseum. After the training period, Juris and Poty met K. alone; they talked 1-2 minutes and Juris explained the general situation; he placed my letter with the telephone number in the book, because the time was too short to explain everything in detail. K. immediately covered the book casually with his outer training clothes which he was carrying over his arm, and went to the locker room. He was very upset and nervous. Juris offered him 3 or 4 dimes so he could use a public phone, but he did not take them.

Sunday evening.

K. did not telephone between 7 and 9 p.m. I called at 11:45 p.m., after having tried 3 or 4 times before that without getting an answer; finally the operator said that the Russians were having dinner and would return to their rooms at about 11:30.

The telephone conversation was as follows: It was very hard for him to decide what to do, but he would give me a definite answer on Monday, at 4 p.m.; somebody should come to his window, and he would come out and tell him what was going to happen, since the players were subjected to a very strict discipline and he could not go out anywhere by himself, it would be too noticeable.

Monday, 3 p.m.

*When
you leave*

I sent Maris to the meeting [with K.] with instructions on what to do in the event K. wanted to leave the hotel for good at that time.
Maris went to the hotel at 3 p.m. At 3:30 p.m. Maris telephoned me from the hotel, that the players had gone to eat shortly before 3:30 p.m., and before going to the dining-room K. had come out on the balcony, and had looked around for quite a while ^{he} ~~she~~ apparently noticed Maris in the car, ^{and} ~~she~~ watched him for a long time. He was nervous and alarmed.

SECRET

At 4:15 p.m. I drove to the hotel myself and parked my car around the corner near the stairway. I remained in the car. After a while, at about 4:20, I drove around the hotel to see what Maris was doing. They were ~~just~~ talking to each other. The conversation was as follows:

1) First Maris asked if they could talk. The answer was: there was no one around and they could talk safely. 2) In answer ~~xxx~~ to the question whether he had made up his mind, K. said that he had been thinking all night and that it was very hard to decide. 3) Maris asked whether K. had destroyed the letter which he had received Sunday with the book. K. said he had destroyed it, and that was the reason he could not call me the night before, since he had lost the telephone number while destroying the letter. 4) When asked whether they should come to pick him up after the game at midnight, as it had been agreed, K. said they should come and wait for him to appear on the balcony. On this the conversation ended. Maris had the impression that K. was really having a hard time trying to make up his mind and that K. was all upset. He also had the impression that no one had witnessed their conversation.

I drove around the block and found Maris already sitting in his car, and we both drove away at the same time.

Monday night game.

I arranged with Maris to go to the game together, and during the women's game we would ask K. once more whether we should come to pick him up at night after the game, or not. The situation was the same as during the previous game. Some boys were collecting autographs and the Latvians were sitting behind us. Ritums was not there. Berzins appeared with his palm-tree plants for Muiznieks. Gulbis was beside M., but he was talking to some Latvian teenagers. Maris first went and sat down next to Berzins, who introduced him to M.- M. said that they had already met in Rome !!!? Apparently he thought it was Juris. Then Maris went behind the back of K. and asked whether anyone there spoke Latvian, and they talked about 10 minutes. First they ^{MARIS & KALVINS} talked about the game, ^{about} the tall players in Turkey and Italy, about sports in Latvia and the fact that basketball and handball were the main types of sport, but that football was played less and not so well. During the conversation K. had been twisting his fingers all the time. Then Maris asked whether they should come for him at night, or not. K. replied that they should come, but that there was going to be a banquet together with the American players after the game, and he didn't know at what time he would be back in his room. Maris told him again that they would wait in two cars, one in front of the balcony and the other around the corner near the stairway, and then he left him.

During the night, at the hotel.

Maris drove to the hotel at 11:30 p.m. I left at 12:00. The situation developed as follows: When M. parked his car, the last person to leave K.'s room to hurry to the banquet was the Estonian Lipsno. Then the room was dark. About 5 or 10 minutes later, a light was turned on in K.'s room, or in the bathroom, so that apparently someone was still in K.'s room who had not gone to the banquet, or had left later by another door.

The banquet continued until about 1:00 a.m.; when I drove around on the way to the hotel, several groups were ~~checking out of~~ their rooms. We decided to wait another 30 minutes or so. We noticed that the captain of the Russian team went around to check all the rooms; some of them came downstairs, where several cars were parked in front of the porch, and the men walked up and down. One of the players came quite close to Maris' car and seemed to be looking at the car license numbers. It is hard to say whether this was intentional, or out of personal curiosity to look at the cars. No one came up behind my car and there was no kind of traffic or movement. On the first floor, where the officials were staying, people were also moving around, and since it was already 1:30 a.m. and the movement in the rooms, especially on the ground floor, was continuing, we decided to give up waiting. During the time between 11:30 and 1:30 K. did not show himself. It was my personal impression that all rooms were being checked, and that the officials wanted to be sure all the men were in bed. I am also convinced that if K. had really wanted to leave, he would have had a chance, but apparently it was hard for him to decide, either because of personal convictions, or because of his relatives in Latvia.

I hope that we did not overdo anything or do anything wrong. I was unable to find out anything about the Estonians because of lack of time.

Because of our special activities during the 4 days of last week, I and my sons had some additional expenses for gasoline, sandwiches, and the "special supper" which was prepared last Saturday night, in the total amount of about $50.00.

Sincerely yours,

[signature illegible]
