10 January 1948

Interrogation of OKAWA on 3 January 1946 produced the following:

1. KASUYA, Takeo, who was OKAWA's chief assistant, was responsible for the disposition of graduates from the language institute. It was he who maintained close liaison with the Foreign Ministry, with No. 2 Department of the General Staff, and with the head offices of commercial firms with branches overseas, to insure that each graduate was assigned to that part of East Asia which had been on his special study. No. 2 Department, for instance, arranged for the drafting into the Army of certain graduates, their subsequent dispatch to Singapore, and their attachment to the Mikuri Kikan.

2. Annamite Societies: OKAWA was questioned about the existence of cultural or pseudo-cultural societies which might have some connection with subversive activities in French-Indo China. The only Annamite Society in Japan (as far as he is aware) went under the name of the KISARANEI KAI (February Society), the purpose of which was to look after the interests of Annamite Students in Japan. Its leader was General MATSUI (Iwami)

3. In Hanoi there existed the YAMANE KENKOU-JO (which might also have been known as the YAMANE KIKAN), founded by YAMANE, Daisai for economic research. YAMANE is an authority on Indo-China affairs; he went to F.I.C. after the beginning of the war, and as a representative of FUJITA, Gami (airline captain) He is thought to have returned to Japan early in 1944 and at present may still be with FUJITA Gami in Tokyo.
