He gave [redacted] this memo on 15 April at which time he also produced a list of his contacts. We are attaching this list of 40 names to permit Headquarters to have a general idea of those persons with whom [redacted] deals. Although the names will be carded locally as [redacted] contacts we are not putting them in RI carding format in the sense of adding PDOB, addresses, etc. In the case of many of these persons there is a wealth of information [redacted] and Headquarters files. Enzo BETTIZA and Arrigo LEVI, for example, are dealt with extensively in OIRA-52449 and OIRA-52508, Ignazio SILONE is a famous writer, etc.

RIM TO
FROM
SUBJECT : Meeting with QRBOUT - 10 April 1970

REPORTING TO HQS: No need at moment

ACTION OUTSTANDING: See him for lengthy session before he sees Enzo BETTIZA of Corniera della Sana. X-ref this RIM to [] , and BETTIZA and FEIST files.

1. On 9 April 1970 [] introduced me to [] at a coffee bar out Via Salaria. The purpose was to tell Q that I had met [] and there no need for Q to push on this.

2. []: No strain. Told Q that if [] called him not to dodge him but also not to push for further contact since I had met him. Told him [] had told me he leaving Italy for Australia in 4 months but Q said this must be new since last word from [] on this was he going in winter or spring (1971).

3. [] He and [] had planned to go out with their wives on the evening of 8 April 1970 but []'s wife not feeling good so he and [] spent 4 hours in 2-way discussions. Interesting in that Q now, I feel, probably has a better insight into what makes [] tick than any American I know. Discussed everything under sun, from D's analysis of SELEPIN as a human being (D knew him well from the old youth organization days in Moscow and Prague), the "Soviet man", "new" and "old" Communism, etc.; . Too intricate to write down here but I asked Q to write it up any old way - but in depth- for our files. Q asked our interest in D's Czech edition of his book. I gave non-committal and Q said VIGORELLI is subsidizing D to small degree. The magazine, especially, is being assisted by VIGORELLI. Any moves on [] by Hqs and/or [] should be made, in my opinion, only after thorough debriefs of Q on him.

4. BETTIZA: [] had told me the week previous that Q would probably be meeting BETTIZA.) Q said he wanted to pitch BETTIZA to be on a "board of ~~Consultants~~ for him re analytical work on East Europe and the interaction between East Europe and the socialist parties of western Europe. I told him about the series of articles on Italy which Bettiza had written and said I wanted to see him for a lengthy session before he left for Milan. He said he had an ~~fix~~ appointment to see Bettiza either the weekend of the 18th or Monday the 20th.

5. Recommendation: [] has already asked Q to write up a current list of his contacts. We should continue to push him on this but I think it might be just as well not to wait for him to do it but to sit down with him over a several-hour session and debrief him. Since I want to talk to him in some depth on the Bettiza matter in any case I'll use that opportunity to cull his contacts in the general area of ~~OR~~ PCI/ East Europe/third-national entree. E.g., since he knows GRIMM of EPA he may well know other types of this sort as well. I can also go into, at that time, his views on turn-over (eventual) of someone such as Bettiza in a manner which would not affect Q's security.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

FROM: [REDACTED]
SUBJECT: Three hour conversation with Jiry Pelikan,
Rome, April 9, 1970

Yesterday evening I spent over three very interesting hours over drinks and dinner with Mr. Pelikan. I had met him about six weeks earlier; have seen him one other time; and talked with him frequently by telephone since meeting him. so it was a relaxed session. Pelikan had called me originally on Professor Ripellino's suggestion. He was looking for support for some of the Czech publications; Ripellino had obviously told him of our interest in publishing.

Pelikan is in his late 40's. He is very alert and interested. He speaks English quite well; in addition, he speaks French, German, and Russian, and passable Italian. He was very personable and open, and talked at great length about his past, particularly his experience in the student and youth field.

He defines himself as a Socialist (not in the Soviet Russian meaning of the word), with much in common with Western Socialists. He looks on those Communists who still believe in Stalinism-Leninism as immature. He still believes in many of the ideals, but sees in Soviet Communism only bureaucratic conservatism and Fascism. He seems to be anti-Russian, but admires those positive qualities of the "muzhik". He thinks Russians and Americans are somewhat similar: both ingenuous, rough and unrefined, imbued with frontier enthusiasm. He knows the Soviet Union; he would like to visit the U.S. next year.

I was interested in his evaluation of Sheliepin, simply as a human being. He has known Sheliepin for twenty years, and worked closely with him when he was President of the International Union of Students in Prague and Sheliepin, as the Soviet representative to IUS, was vice-president. He says Sheliepin, of all the group of Soviet activists that he knew, Pavlov, Semichastny, et al, was the only one who was open, curious, interested in other opinions and ideas, anti-bureaucratic, and who tried to rectify inequities. The rest were pure bureaucrats. Sheliopin, like the other student-youth leaders did, speaks English. However, they always spoke Russian with the Czechs. Sheliopin exerted his will by flattery, suggestion, reasoning, etc. and never exerted direct pressure - although if Pelikan could not be moved on an important issue, he called Moscow, who called the Czech Party, who called in Pelikan. So, in the end, Sheliopin always got his way. Similarly, on a government or party level, the Soviets tried to get their way without threats." However, after the "Prague Spring", they simply said, "agree, or we will destroy Prague and 500,000 Czechoslovaks." The Czech leaders this time actually feared for their lives.

The new Czechoslovak emigres at first thought they would not organize themselves formally; now they think it is necessary and will form some sort of organization. They want their base to be always inside Czechoslovakia, to work closely with the internal opposition. They feel they can work with the old emigration, that they do have much in common. They already cooperate with RFE, for example, and Pelikan respects this organization as well as the emigres there. He says that ten years ago he regarded emigres as traitors; five years ago, although no longer traitors, simply on the wrong path. Now he sees the difficulty of their situation, and agrees with them on many things. He says that he realizes that he and his colleagues made many mistakes and were blinded for many years.

The Italian radical weekly, L'Espresso, had promised to support the first number of the clandestine Literary Listy, recently published in Rome. At the last minute they said they had no funds. Giancarlo Vigorelli put them in contact with the weekly L'Europa, which first published these materials in Italian, and then assisted with the Czech language version. Pelikan is now looking for support for the second number, scheduled for the second anniversary of the invasion of Czechoslovakia. He also is publishing their book on the secret party congress of the Czechoslovak Communist Party (this book was published in German, Die Panzer Überrollen den Parteitag, Europa Verlag, Vienna, Zurich, Frankfurt; and in French, Le Congrès Clandestin, Seuil, Paris). He needs funds for this. I think I can suggest channels for assisting them if there is interest.
