Kurt WALDHEIM
(Phonetic: VAHLThime)

AUSTRIA
MICROFILMED

Secretary General of the United Nations (since January 1972)

Addressed as:
Mr. Secretary General

The quintessence of the professional diplomat, Kurt Waldheim is serving his second five-year term as UN Secretary General, having been reelected by acclamation in December 1976. During his first term he earned a reputation for fairness and objectivity that contributed to his reelection. Waldheim believes that his main role is that of a mediator, and he resents being held accountable for events that are neither his responsibility nor within his limited powers to control. In his opinion, there is simply no alternative to the United Nations, and he is dedicated to its survival. He regards reducing the gap between the world's rich and poor nations as the greatest challenge to international statesmen. According to a close friend of his, Waldheim would like to be remembered in the history books as the Secretary General who brought about the beginnings of a constructive North-South dialogue. (C)

Performance and Personal Views

The indefatigable Waldheim thrives on work and usually puts in long hours at his job. In carrying out the duties and responsibilities of his office he has traveled throughout the world. Although he occasionally makes pessimistic pronouncements on the activities and future of the United Nations, he undoubtedly enjoys serving as Secretary General and is confident that he has done and is doing a good job. He is almost equally as confident of his chances for reelection in 1981: a high-level UN official has said that Waldheim believes he has the United States, France and the United Kingdom "in his pocket." The official added that the Secretary General was less certain of the support of the Soviet Union and China. In May 1981 Waldheim visited the Soviet Union, apparently at least in part to solicit that country's support for his reelection, even though he was aware that the Soviets were displeased over his attempts to involve the United Nations in holding a meeting to consider the situation in Afghanistan since the Soviet invasion of that country. He traveled to China in June 1981, again probably in part to gain support for his candidacy; [ ] China has suggested that it would prefer someone from Africa, Asia or Latin America for the top UN post.
