Dear John:

Thank you for your letter of 31 October and your very kind offer to spend an hour or so with us on 28 November to tell us some of your impressions following your trip to China.

I understand Walt Rostow's group has asked you to spend some time with them on the morning of the 28th, and we'd be very pleased to have you meet with some of our people in the afternoon. Two-thirty seems to be a good time for an afternoon session so as to catch the late lunchers. Does this suit you? Or, if you're not already tied down for lunch, perhaps you'd like to come out here at one or so, talk through lunch and continue on afterwards if it seems profitable. I'll look forward to seeing you on the 28th.

Sincerely

(b)(3)

Dear Ray:

might
I am back from my trip and struggling with my report on Communist China. I hope it will be off the presses in about five weeks. However, I will be in Washington one day before that time, namely, November 28th. If you would care to get together some of your people who ~~would~~ be interested in hearing me sound off on China (as Amory did last year when I made my study of Soviet aid and trade), I would be very happy to participate.

I could do this either morning or afternoon of the 28th, and I am offering to do the same thing for Walt Rostow at the other time.

Even if this doesn't work out, though, let's lunch or have a drink.

Sincerely,

John Scott
